GENERAL CONCERT THEME:

This year marks the 50th anniversary of the first performance of everyone's favorite children's story, "Peter and the Wolf." Composed by the great Russian composer Sergei Prokovief, "Peter and the Wolf" had its first performance in 1936 and has been performed thousands of times in the ensuing years all over the world. The Portland Symphony has done it often, but this year, the piece will be presented with dancers from the Portland Ballet Repertory Company and Tony Montanaro as a guest artist. To add to the fun, the orchestra will perform two other pieces which will require the participation of some of the audience. It is a program filled with surprises and shows a young audience how enjoyable music can be.
